

Ghadiali Fined $20,000, Ordered to Halt 'Cures'

Ex-India Army Colonel Paroled Five Years, Warned on Cunning

Dinshah P. Ghadiali, former Indian Army colonel and his Dinshah Spectro-Chrome Institute drew a total of $20,000 in fines from U. S. District Court Judge Philip Forman in Camden yesterday.

Ghadiali, charged with 12 counts of violating the U. S. food, drug and cosmetic act, also was given a suspended sentence of three years in prison and placed on probation for five years.

The court ordered Ghadiali also to disassociate himself from the Spectro-Chrome and Spectro-Chrome Metry and from teaching or lecturing on it and to turn over to the government for destruction all literature dealing with devices he claimed were used to cure ills of man.

Court Lauds Prosecution

The sentence proved a dramatic climax to one of the longest court trials in history here. The hearing of testimony and argument required 42 days and the transcript was voluminous. Judge Forman delivered high praise of the prosecution, presented by Assistant U. S. Attorney Grover C. Richman Jr., of Moorestown. As in previous trials on federal charges, Ghadiali served as his own counsel.

Addressing Ghadiali, Judge Forman said:

"You express great admiration for America and American customs, but you do not adhere to them. In fact, you have walled yourself up, except as to a few people who are your adherents. In addition, you have walled up your family.

"This can be done in a country such as America is. This isolation of yours is a pattern in your life which was shown during the trial of this case.

"The trial was conducted in all of the American tradition of fairness. Every facility was accorded you during the trial. You are following a pattern of design in which you are the central figure in a little world you created. We have many, many cults and groups in America, but that is permissible in America. Many years ago you evolved an idea and an alleged system to heal people. Attendant upon this was a diet and prohibitions as alcohol and the like, and a device to shine attuned color waves to cure ills.

"With attuned color waves, and your system, you made a rather cunning use of the New Jersey corporation laws. You would have me think a wide chasm separates you from the corpora-

I must carry out the verdict of the jury without vindictiveness or retribution. Very, very emphatically it is my duty to stop the evil, and there is evil in this thing, whether designedly or not.

"You have conceived yourself to be a creator of a small universe and a system of healing which is the greatest boon to mankind. You so described yourself in your encyclopedia. This is an obsession on your part. You completely failed to present any proof except from the lips of 150 poor souls who were devoid of any knowledge of human ills who felt that they had been relieved.

"It was very unimpressive. You failed to produce a single scientist from all the scientists in this country to prove your claims of efficacy. I can only feel that 112 of the witnesses called from thousands, as so often happens, were duped, perhaps they had lightly developed imaginations. Their delusions were coupled with the expenditure by them of $90 for a device and moneys paid to your so-called Normalators, not one of which was in the least qualified to treat human ills.

"The system is not only fraught with danger, but people with very dangerous ills, such as cancer and diabetes, might well fall victims to and even die when exposed to your system, being diverted from well-known and founded medical treatment.

"The vast sums and time spent by the government that will result in shutting this system off from those afflicted with diseases such as cancer and diabetes who should get quick and appropriate treatment, is sufficient to show that this case has well served its purpose. It is the court's purpose to implement the verdict of the jury to effect the overall purpose of this prosecution."

Judge Forman then mentioned the maximum penalty as a total of $12,000 fine for the corporation and $12,000 for Ghadiali and 12 years in prison for the deof five years to run concurrently with the other probation.

As a condition of probation, Judge Forman stipulated that:

Dinshah dis-associate himself from the Spectro-Chrome and Spectro-Chrome Metry; from teaching and lecturing, every form and guise in which it might be projected, to dissolve the Dinshah Spectro-Chrome Institute; to turn over all of his literature to the government for destruction; to discontinue his free guidance to his adherents and to cease directing and editing the Spectro Chrome Magazine, and to afford government agents, at a reasonable time, access to his books and affairs.

"The court will brook no cut, cunning or shrewd breach of probation," Judge Forman warned. "If any breach is disclosed or proven I will not hesitate to call upon the three years' sentence imposed. I have reserved four years which I may later impose on counts 9 and 12.

"It is my purpose to obliterate the danger to the American public that adherence to your system exposes. On a breach of probation you can expect no merciful consideration from this court."

Ghadiali's institute was established at Malaga a number of years ago. He maintained a large house, laboratory, classrooms, print shop and other facilities there with his wife and sons.
